Loosing Part of Ris Brain.

A Pottsville, Pa., dispatch says: The medical fraternity in this part of the world are just now greatly interested in a case which may eventually creep into the books. It has spread to common people, who take great pleasure in informing each other-pointing to Valentine Kemmerer-that a man may loose a good deal of his brain and yet live a very comfortable ex-

On the afternoon of August 25 a train on the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad pulled up at a station about 15 miles from this place. A man who had apparently been waiting for the train boarded it. He was very unsteady in his movements. The trainmen and passengers looked upon him as drunk. He dropped into a seat and paid no attention to anyone. The conductor saked him for his ticket. He made по говропяе.

When finally told that unless he produced a ticket he would be put off the train, he, after much fumbling in his pockets, handed out a dollar bili. When asked about his destination he gave no apswer, and the conductor, fieding that he had enough money, took the man's fare for Pottsville and gave him the change out of his dollar.

When Five Points, a station about five miles from this place, was reached the man tried to leave the train. He was prevented by the conductor, who was afraid he would get injured. At the next station, Port Carbon, he again tried to leave the train. As Port Corbon is only two miles ty road from Porteville, the man was allowed to do as he pleased. As he left the train he staggered like a drunken man and would have fallen but for Geo. Holder, a salnon keeper, who recognized him as a resident of Five Points. It soon became evident he was not under the influence of liquor. Dr. Thomas Birch. of Port Oarbon, was called to attend bim. He found and leg were paralized. He was unable to com prehend anything that might be said to him. He was emaciated to a painful degree, and seemed on the verge of the grave. In tousbing a certain part of Kemmeror's head, Dr. Birch felt him wince. A close inspection of the particular spot revealed a recently healed wound. The hair had grown over it, but it could be seen that the skin seemed of very recent growth. A small piece of the scalp

the man unable to speak. His right side, arm, was removed. Then there was revealed the broken end of a knife blade. The operation of trephining was performed and a piece of the skull about the size of a silver quarter removed. In the centre of this, so firmly imbedded that it could not be remeved without breaking the bone, was found a broken knife blade. One and three-eights inches of the blade penetrated the brain. The knifesblade entered the skull near the anterior superior angle of the left parietal bone, then penetrated the anterior portion of the left lobe of the cerebrum. When the operation had been performed an abscess was found surrounding the point of the blade. This was removed. In removing it about two outces of brain matter were also removed and tissue that would cover the palm of an ordinary hand. The operation was performed on August 26. Before it was made it was evident that the man was dying; otherwise, perhaps, Dr. Birch would have deliberated before taking the risk.

It has since become known that Kemmerer worked in a brickyard on George's Island, Westohester county, N. Y. Oa August 15th he was stabbed. From that time until long after he reached home his mind was a blank. He will probably never be able to tell how he resched home.

His condition is improving wonderfully. The orifice in his skull looks healthy. It still emits a flow of pus, but the flow is daily growing less. His eye looks bright, and the cloud is gradually lifting from his brain. He has regained the use of his limbs, and can walk about quite easily. He can use his right arm and hand, though not very well. He seems to understand what is said, but cannot express himself. He makes the most tremendous efforts to speak.

He can say "Yes" and "No," but that is the extent of his talking powers up to per ton of 2240 lbs. date. His appetite is good-"tremendous." his wife says: He sleeps well at night, but sel dom during the day. The popular theory-not, of course, among medical men-is that the forcible entrance of any foreign substance into the brain will cause instant death. Kemmerer's case will have the effect of completely extin-guishing this theory wherever it is heard of. guishing this theory wherever it is heard of.

Dr. Birch is confident that his patient will fully recover, and in this opinion most of his colleagues are with him. Accidents in which both skull and brain, but particularly the former, suffer injutry, are of frequent occurrence. Here is one which is bad enough in its way to head the list. Al Wilson is an engineer on the Reading road. He has been for a number of years. Some time ago—several years—he was oiling his engine as it stood at a station. His head was between the piston rod and the eccentric when his fireman, who was unaware of Wiltric, when his fireman, who was unaware of Wilson's position, put his hand on the lever and started the engine. Wilson's head coursed the position of a nut in a nut cracker. The result to his skull was what would have happened to the nut if the cracker had been used in the ordinary way. Wilson's skull was cracked not in one place, but in several places. He was picked up in an unconscious condition. His death was looked upon as inevitable. Bight inches square of bone were taken from his skull. The brain was uninjured. To day he runs his engine and is considered one of the best men on the road. But if Kemmerer gets well, and the chances seem to be altogether in his favor, he will be natural curiosity.
